Ayodhyā was ruled by the great King Daśaratha who was learned in the Vedas. He was far-sighted and illustrious and he was loved by his people. The greatest of all the Ikṣvāku warriors, he had performed many sacrifices. Dedicated to dharma, Daśaratha was disciplined, equal to the best of seers and was known in the three worlds as a royal sage. The mighty Daśaratha was victorious over his enemies but he was loyal to his friends. He had complete control over his senses. His wealth and prosperity rivalled that of Indra and Kubera. Like the glorious Manu had protected his realm, so Daśaratha lived on earth and protected it.
