The journey to herd immunity

1. A novel pathogen is introduced to a community. Because it's new, no one has immunity and it begins to spread.

2. Those who recover and those who receive a vaccine (if there is one) develop immunity, at least for a period of time. With the coronavirus, it's not known how long. So far, there is no proven vaccine.

3. Herd immunity takes hold when the pathogen can't find new hosts and stops spreading. That happens once a sufficient portion of the community is immune. For this virus, estimates range from 55% to 82%.
